The Elephants of Catalina and Santa Rosa

By C. F. Neder

Professor Neder, after his return from his recent trip to the West Indies, where he had the opportunity of studying the habits of the wild elephant, has written an account of his experiences. He has visited the islands of Catalina and Santa Rosa, where he observed the behavior of the elephants. He has noted that the elephants are highly intelligent and possess a remarkable memory. They are also very gentle and friendly, and are often seen playing with one another.

Some Weird Dreams Which Have Come True

Five people have recently come into the world with some unusual characteristics. One of them, a baby girl, was born with a heart defect that was thought to be fatal.
